Los Angeles, California, is battling devastating wildfires, with fatalities and structural losses, as authorities deploy pink fire retardants to contain the flames.

Santa Ana winds

Santa Ana Winds: The Santa Ana winds in California, typically strong between October and January, have been exceptionally powerful in 2025.

The winds originate from high-pressure systems in the Great Basin and blow hot, dry air from east to west, flowing down towards the Pacific coast.

As air descends the Sierra Nevada and Santa Ana mountains and passes through valleys, it gets compressed, which raises its temperature and reduces humidity.

In Southern California, these winds exacerbate wildfires by rapidly spreading flames across dry vegetation, power lines, and buildings.
